

SAM RAYBURN HOUSE MUSEUM

890 W. State Hwy. 56 • Bonham, TX 75418
903.583.5558
www.visitsamrayburnhouse.com

Preserve the Future

Help the Texas Historical Commission preserve the past while touring this historic attraction. Please be mindful of artifacts and respectful of historic structures. We hope you enjoy your visit and encourage you to celebrate Texas heritage with younger generations.

See the Sites

From western forts and adobe structures to Victorian mansions and pivotal battlegrounds, the Texas Historical Commission's state historic sites exemplify a breadth of Texas history. Come explore the real stories at the real places.

Plan your next trip at www.texashistoricsites.com

TEXAS HISTORICAL COMMISSION
real places telling real stories

www.thc.state.tx.us

TEXAS HERITAGE TRAILS PROGRAM

25K 9/09

VISITORS GUIDE

SAM RAYBURN HOUSE MUSEUM

TEXAS HISTORICAL COMMISSION

Welcome to the Sam Rayburn House Museum. Step into the warm and welcoming world of one of Texas' best known statesmen, Sam Rayburn. As one of the most powerful and influential politicians in the 20th century, Rayburn served 24 terms in the U.S. House of Representatives. Today, his 1916 home preserves his real stories of life in Texas.

Original furnishings, candid photographs and personal belongings remain as they were when the Rayburns lived here. Visitors learn about Rayburn's personal life and his specific political achievements that impacted mid-20th-century history. The grounds include Rayburn's farm, garden, original outbuildings and Rayburn's 1947 signature Cadillac.

Rayburn's 1947 signature Cadillac

THE FARM

In 1914, after his election to the U.S. Congress, Sam Rayburn purchased 121 acres of land two miles west of Bonham. By 1916, construction of his two-story clapboard home was complete. The surrounding farmland produced cotton, corn and sorghum and provided pastureland for cattle.

Rayburn's later additions to the home included several rooms and porches. He used his own money to pay the electric company to run poles and electric lines to his home in 1935.

Over the years, the farm was home to various family members. The original occupants of the home were Rayburn, his brother Tom, sister Lucinda and their parents, William and Martha. Tom Rayburn, the farm's manager, lived in the house until he married in the 1940s. Rayburn's second cousin, Minnie Eldridge, and Rayburn's brother Will also briefly occupied the home. Medibel (Rayburn) Bartley, Rayburn's sister, and her husband Edward moved into the home in the 1940s. Having been briefly married and divorced, Rayburn enjoyed being surrounded by family.

After his death, the home, land and possessions were left to the Sam Rayburn Foundation. His sister lived in the house until her death in 1969. The foundation deeded the home to the state in 1972 and the home opened as a museum in 1975. It is a National Historic Landmark, a Recorded Texas Historic Landmark and is listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

Left: Tour guide shows visitors the breakfast room
Above: Sam Rayburn in the garden, circa 1951

Tractor near the barn and garden

A Lifetime Politician

In 1887, five-year-old Sam Rayburn moved with his family from Tennessee to Flag Springs, a few miles from Bonham, to farm the fertile soil of the blackland prairie. As the eighth of 11 children, Rayburn grew up in a large family that never had much money but always had encouragement for his aspirations. Rayburn's interest in politics began when he was 12 years old after hearing Texas Congressman Joe Bailey speak at a political meeting. Impressed with Bailey's oratorical abilities, Rayburn decided he too would one day become a great political speaker.

He began his legendary political career in 1906 when he ran for and won a seat in the Texas House of Representatives. He was elected to the U.S. Congress in 1912. During his 48 years in the House, Rayburn served as minority leader for four years, majority leader for three years and speaker for 17 years, until his death in 1961. He remains the longest-serving speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives.

While a lifetime Democrat and party loyalist, Rayburn tended to be moderate on most issues, and he wasn't afraid to act independently or cut across party lines when he felt strongly about a particular issue.

Rayburn had numerous legislative accomplishments. He authored the Truth in Securities Act, the Railroad Holding Company Bill, and the bills that created the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Communications Commission. He co-authored the Rural Electrification Act in 1935, which brought electricity to most rural homes in the nation. Two years later, he guided President Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal programs through the U.S. House.

In 1944, concerned for rural citizens, Rayburn initiated a federal program to build farm-to-market roads. That same year, he helped pass a bill authorizing construction of the Denison Dam, which created Lake Texoma. When completed, the lake was the fifth-largest man-made reservoir in the world.

Whenever Congress recessed, Rayburn enjoyed getting away from the hurried lifestyle of Washington, D.C., preferring the quiet country surroundings of his farm. Although Rayburn had a congressional office on the square in Bonham, he chose to spend the majority of his time at his home where he set up an office in his sitting room. Constituents regularly visited the home to meet with him.

Political figures such as President Harry Truman, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court Fred Vinson and Texas Congressman Lyndon B. Johnson were just a few of the high-ranking public servants who visited.

Rayburn served in the Texas Legislature with Johnson's father and mentored Johnson in his early career. Rayburn was one of the strongest proponents of the Kennedy/Johnson Democratic ticket in 1960. Two years after Rayburn died, Johnson became president when Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas in November 1963.

Rayburn's fairness and mastery of the political process earned him respect from both sides of the House floor. His lengthy political career is attributed to his straightforward view of the political process and his honesty and integrity. Although his professional rewards were many, he rejuvenated himself at home, enjoying the simple pleasures of the country and family life on the farm.

JFK, LBJ and Sam Rayburn