SPOTLIGHT ON SEGUIN

Written by Kyle Kramm, Main Street Manager, Seguin Main Street Program, Population approx. 26,660

The slip covers are coming down and the sold signs are going up in downtown Seguin. It is an exciting time for the Seguin Main Street Program and all of Seguin as we enter a period of unprecedented growth and development.

Seguin, a community of over 26,000, was an original pilot Main Street community when the Texas Main Street Program began in 1981. After being in the program for a few years, Seguin left the program for about a decade and then reentered in 1997. Seguin has been active in the program ever since and is looking forward to celebrating its 20th anniversary next year.

In the 19 years since reentering the program, a large number of public projects have been accomplished. Projects including burying the overhead electric, bringing the Central Park fountain back to life, multiple Texas Capital Fund grants for sidewalks, and rebuilding our little “River Walk.” Many of these projects would not have been possible without the support of the citizens of Seguin who approved Destination Seguin Bonds to ensure that downtown would be a location for both citizens and visitors.

In November 2013, voters again approved additional bonds that brought development near the downtown area. A brand new library that is three times the size of the current library is now under construction at the edge of our historic district.

Seguin is fortunate to be the county seat for Guadalupe County, and the county has been an excellent partner for downtown, reinvesting almost $20 million in historic property rehabilitations within the last five years. This includes a parking garage offering all-day free parking, rehabbing a three-story furniture store into a state of the art justice center, and over $5 million in restoring the art-deco Guadalupe County Courthouse.
Following these public investments, the private sector began making significant investments in downtown Seguin. One of the most recent and perhaps largest reinvestment is the Park Plaza Hotel Seguin, which re-opened in December 2015.

Built in 1917, the four-story structure served as a welcoming hotel for visitors to the community until the 1940s. The building accommodated many uses over its almost century of existence, from the hospital, to dorms and apartments for Texas Lutheran University, and finally converted to office space in 1980.

The new owner, Jenny Savage, purchased the building in 2013 and began working on plans for rehabilitating the building into a boutique antique hotel with modern amenities. Savage has a long background in the hospitality industry, and she decided she wanted to try a new venture and tackle a historic project. Savage chose Seguin and the Park Plaza due to the community’s diverse economy and the investments made in the downtown area.

On December 2, 2015 the hotel opened with a large party for the entire community. The hotel features 31 rooms, two bars, and the Chop House restaurant. Just in the short three months of the hotel being open, you can already see the impact the hotel is having on downtown. Before the hotel, downtown would empty around 6 p.m., but now there is life in downtown, even at night. Our downtown merchants are seeing new shoppers who are staying at the hotel and falling in love with Seguin. This last year saw several individuals

A large number of projects have been taking place in Seguin. and businesses reinvesting in downtown. You’re So Crafty, a local craft store, expanded from a small 900 square foot building into a 3,000 square foot space. A new convenience store, antique store, insurance agent, cupcake bakery, and more all opened in downtown over the last year. Additionally, over 10 buildings sold because many buyers see downtown Seguin as a prime market for investment.

There is a sense of excitement among community members as they watched several slipcovers be removed and original historic elements became exposed. The Starcke Sleep Shop's slipcover was removed in the summer of 2015 exposing the original wooden windows and transoms. The building is receiving a complete overhaul that when completed will create nearly 9,000 square feet of white box retail space, answering one of our largest problems of having limited space ready for new businesses looking to locate in downtown Seguin.

Not only did new businesses and investors come downtown after the public reinvestment, but so did the community events. Seguin Main Street hosted our Trade Days in downtown for 16 years, and several organizations held events in downtown for decades. As downtown continues to become revitalized, more organizations are looking to host events in our Central Park located in the heart of downtown.

Our annual signature event, Pecan Fest, continues to grow and attract larger crowds every year. It is all about celebrating the nut that made Seguin famous. Our largest event however is our Fourth of July celebration that includes Freedom Fiesta, a patriotic concert, fireworks, and the Biggest Small-Town Fourth of July Parade that attracts over 10,000 spectators.

This recent surge in activity would not have happened if the tools had not been put into place over the last 19 years. From a variety of incentives for both business and property owners, to our preservation ordinance, and becoming a Certified Local Government, all have been important tools for the reinvestment occurring in downtown Seguin.

As we prepare to enter our third decade as a Main Street community, we realize that we as a community have accomplished a lot for downtown Seguin. However, we still have a lot of work ahead of us to reach the revitalized downtown that we envision. Issues of second story vacancies, no public restrooms, bicycle facilities, and more are all areas that the Seguin Main Street Program will be looking to address in the coming years with the support of the community.

THE DANGERS OF STUCCO REMOVAL FROM A BRICK FAÇADE

Article written by Sarah Blankenship, Project Design Assistant, Texas Main Street Program

On a site visit to Brownsville last week, there was a good example of why it does not always work to remove the stucco from a building. In the left image below, the remaining stucco can still be seen. As preservationists, the opportunity to bring back the former glory of a building that has been hidden is exciting. From this vantage point, removing the stucco reveals the original brick colors, mortar, pattern, and the detailing on the cornice line. It certainly brings more depth and visual interest to the building.

However, there is a problem. Taking a closer look at the façade reveals severely damaged brick. On the bottom middle, the face front of the brick has been ripped off with the stucco. On the bottom right, lines can be seen where the brick was purposefully damaged/hammered to create grooves to attach the stucco.

Due to the many changes in Seguin, more visitors have made their way downtown for local events. The annual Pecan Fest continues to grow and attract larger crowds each year.

Removing slipcovers from buildings can be challenging. (Left) All parts of the stucco slipcover may not be removable. (Middle) In some cases, the face front of the brick can be ripped off along with the stucco. (Right) Lines are visible where the brick was purposefully damaged to create grooves so the stucco could attach.
What is the problem with both these conditions? Most visibly, the aesthetics are diminished, but more importantly, this building is now more susceptible to deterioration. Made of clay, shale, and local additives, bricks are fired in a kiln to create a strong durable material. The exterior is the strongest and hardest part. When the exterior surface of the brick is removed, it exposes the softer interior of the brick, and this brick is much more susceptible to deterioration by weather. If left in this condition, the front façade will gradually crumble off.

So what do you do? Most likely, the best option is to simply reapply the stucco. While this may be a disappointing thought, consider that a stucco surface may have been the original design intention and the most appropriate to the building. Stucco, also referred to as plaster and render, has been used since ancient times as a finished surface. An NPS Preservation Brief explains how Andrew Jackson Downing created influential pattern books in the 1850s. He advocated the use of stucco because in his opinion, stucco was superior in many respects to plain brick or stone because it was cheaper, warmer, dryer, and could be “agreeably” tinted.

Some buildings have chosen to paint or seal the brick, leaving the defects of the damaged brick visible. Paint creates the potential to trap water and cause further problems, so prep work to remove efflorescence, mildew, mold, moss, and possible entry points for water needs to be considered prior to adding another problem.

Many Main Street cities have decided to look into stucco removal to reveal the original historic brick façade. Prior to any removal, historic photographs must be utilized to determine if the original material was actually exposed brick. If it was brick, then investigate several small test areas to see how easily the stucco comes off. Multiple test areas are suggested because underlying surfaces may not have the same conditions. Test how easily the stucco can be removed. If the stucco pulls the face of the brick off, stop immediately. If the brick is damaged underneath, stop and leave/repair the stucco. If the stucco comes off without any problems and the brick underneath is undamaged, then continue with removal.

Should any Texas Main Street have a question about stucco removal, the Design Team is available for consultation.
