Description

The Henry Smith statue is an 8.6-foot-tall bronze full-figure portraiture mounted on a Texas pink granite base and flanked by 12.5-foot-tall granite shafts in Brazoria, Brazoria County, Texas. Commissioned by the State of Texas, it is one of 20 statues erected to celebrate the anniversary of Texas independence, and is identified as such in Buildings and Monuments of the Texas Centennial MPS. Hugo Villa sculpted the statue to memorialize Henry Smith, the first governor of Texas, and architect Donald S. Nelson designed the granite base. Completed in 1938, the statue is on the 1933 Brazoria Public School grounds, facing State Highway 36. It retains excellent integrity and is in good condition.

Brazoria, Texas is 55 miles south of Houston in Brazoria County, which borders the Texas Gulf Coast. Named for the Brazos River that runs through it, the original Brazoria townsite is located on the south bank of the river in the western portion of the county. In 1912, a second townsite was laid out one mile south around the St. Louis, Brownsville, and Mexican Railroad (now Missouri-Pacific). State Highway 36 (known locally as Brooks St.) intersects the train tracks to connect the neighborhoods to the north and south of it.

The Henry Smith statue is at its original location two blocks north of the rail line at the intersection of W. Smith St. and TX 36/Brooks St. on grounds historically-associated with the 1933 Brazoria Public School. Today, the two-block property is the Brazoria Civic Center, and the historic school building houses a history museum. It is owned and operated by the Brazoria Heritage Foundation. Eight free-standing buildings, including the schoolhouse, are clustered on the western and middle portion of the lot. The Henry Smith statue is at the far eastern side of the property with no structures immediately surrounding it. It faces east towards the highway from which it is set back approximately 35 feet. A non-historic concrete slab with a flagpole is directly behind it.

The entire memorial is erected on a reinforced concrete cap foundation paved with Texas pink granite, quarried in Llano, Texas. The 14.6’ by 12’ raised rectangular base supports the statue and five granite blocks. The foremost block, 3.5'-tall, supports the bronze figure and the name “HENRY SMITH” is sandblasted on it. The rear portion of the block intersects with the shafts behind it. Above, a bronze full-figure portrait of Henry Smith stands with the right foot forward. Smith’s upper torso and head orient to the right, and he looks slightly down. The left arm is bent at Smith’s side, and his left thumb is hooked in the vest pocket; Smith gestures with the right arm as though he were speaking. The figure is clothed in a style of the era: a long coat, buttoned vest, collared shirt, tie, long pants, and boots. The sculptor’s signature is on the north side of the bronze base, and the foundry is indicated on the south side.

Two, 12.5-foot-tall granite shafts frame the Henry Smith statue. Each are 3’-wide at the base and taper to 2’. Smith’s historical significance is conveyed in inscriptions (Figure 7) that were sand-blasted on the south side of one shaft and the north side of the other shaft. From the rear of the monument (faces west), the foremost block is visible between the shafts. Its back face is inscribed with the following, “ERECTED BY THE STATE OF TEXAS 1936 WITH FUNDS APPROPRIATED BY THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO COMMEMORATE ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF TEXAS INDEPENDENCE.”

The Henry Smith statue retains exceptional integrity and is in good condition as stipulated by the registration requirements outlined in Buildings and Monuments of the Texas Centennial MPS. It retains integrity of materials, design, workmanship as there have been no changes or damage inflicted to the statue since its dedication. The workmanship of Hugo Villa’s artistry evident in its design. It retains integrity of location and setting at its original dedication site on the school grounds in Brazoria along the state highway. The statue conveys the feeling of a commemorative monument created to memorialize Henry Smith, and its association with the 1936 Texas Centennial is intact.

Statement of Significance

The Henry Smith statue in Brazoria, Brazoria County is one of 20 statues erected by the State of Texas between 1937 and 1939 to celebrate the statewide Centennial. Italian-born sculptor Hugo Villa and architect Donald S. Nelson designed the statue to memorialize Henry Smith, known as the first governor of Texas. The idea for the statue originated within the Advisory Board of Historians, a group appointed to recommend commemorative projects for the Centennial. Erected in 1938 on school grounds along the state highway, the community reportedly refused to dedicate the statue because of its “arbitrary” location. Hugo Villa (1886-1948) began his career as an assistant to internationally-acclaimed sculptor Gutzon Borglum, the artist responsible for Mount Rushmore. Villa, known in Texas for his architectural ornamentation, sculpted the Henry Smith statue at the height of his career in the 1930s. It was one of two full-figure statues the artist is known to have completed.

The property is nominated to the National Register at the state level of significance under the multiple property submission Monuments and Buildings of the Texas Centennial. It is eligible under Criterion A in the area of Social History as a product of the concerted statewide effort to commemorate historic persons and events important to Texas history in the 1930s. The monument was commissioned as part of a major Depression-era public arts project and is significant under Criterion C in the area of Art as an important work by sculptor Hugo Villa. The property meets Criterion Consideration F (Commemorative Properties) because it is significant as a work of art that reflects early 20th century interest in recognizing historic subjects throughout Texas, which culminated in the publicly-funded statewide Texas Centennial. The Henry Smith statue is located at its original site in Brazoria and it retains excellent integrity. The period of significance is 1938, the year it was erected.

Brazoria, Texas

Stephen F. Austin’s 1828 colony in Texas included the townsite of present-day Brazoria. It was established at a crossing of the Brazos River, the chief artery of commerce and communication for the settlement. During the Texas Revolution, the Mexican Army burned the town and its citizens fled. Rebuilt along the south bank of the Brazos River, the town functioned as the county seat from 1836 to 1897 before it transferred to Angleton. When the St. Louis, Brownsville, and Mexican Railroad was built in Brazoria County in 1906, it passed south of the town. Brazoria laid a new townsite in 1912, 1 mile south of its original site, along new railway. The development divided the town between each site for two decades, and it gradually merged as the population increased. Between 1906 and 1929, the population grew to 1,050, and Brazoria completed a second school building in 1933 to accommodate its student citizenry. The new public school was located on grounds at the intersection of Smith St. and State Highway36 in the new section. In 1939, a nearby oil discovery revived Brazoria’s economy and it grew steadily until 1986.

Henry Smith (1788-1851)

Kentucky-born Henry Smith settled in present-day Brazoria County in 1827 when he was 39 years old. Smith married three times to women—Harriet, Elizabeth, and Sarah Gillet—who were sisters, and he fathered a total of nine children. Between 1833-1841, he was an active participant in Texas politics under the Mexican government and for the Republic of Texas. He first earned local prominence as the alcalde for the Brazoria jurisdiction in 1833 and was its chosen delegate to the Convention of 1833, one of the first political meetings of colonists that led to the Texas Revolution two years later.

As tensions rose between Texas colonists and the Mexican government in 1834, Smith became a fervent supporter for independence. Texan opponents and proponents to revolution organized a provisional government, the Consultation, on November 7, 1835. Smith chaired the committee to determine the organizational structure of the provisional government. On November 13, the Consultation elected its general council and executive; Smith was selected as the governor. As a leader, however, Smith “did not believe in compromise and did not know the language of diplomacy,” and discord weakened the provisional government. The general council impeached Smith when he attempted to dissolve the conflicted council.

General Sam Houston, first President of the Republic of Texas, selected Smith as his treasury secretary in 1836. However, his efforts to bring the new republic out of debt proved unsuccessful. In 1840-41, Smith served one term in the Texas House of Representatives before he retired. Gold fever enticed Smith from Texas to California in 1849 and he died in a Los Angeles County mining camp on March 4, 1851.

The Henry Smith Statue

Originally conceived as a bas-relief monument, the Henry Smith statue in Brazoria, Brazoria County, Texas is one of 20 bronze statues of historical figures erected by the State of Texas for the 1936 Centennial. The idea for a commemorative monument to Smith statue originated with two members of the Advisory Board of Historians. In October 1935, Louis Kemp and Father Paul Foik recommended to the Commission of Control for Texas Centennial Celebrations $10,000 for a “granite [monument] bearing a bas-relief in bronze commemorating an [sic] historic event in the life of Mr. Smith” to be erected in Brazoria, Brazoria County. A paragraph-long summary of Smith’s 5-year-long political career justified the allocation. J. Frank Dobie, the third board member, challenged his colleague’s decision to recognize Smith and other 19th-century politicians whom he thought were undeserving of monuments and statues. Dobie’s minority report explained:

All of these men had the positions of statesmen without being eminent as statesmen and their personalities have failed to make any impression on the generations that have followed...In any well considered history of Texas these men and their equals receive at best only a paragraph or two. Why should they receive in enduring bronze the equivalent of full-length chapters?

Ultimately, the Commission of Control sided with the majority’s recommendations for Brazoria County that included $10,000 for a monument to Smith.

Brazoria County citizens were keen to celebrate the Texas Centennial, and available newspapers document the county Centennial commission’s progress in organizing local celebrations throughout 1936. However, interest in the statewide program to construct monuments and markers appeared to wane by the time the state completed public art projects, like the Smith statue, in 1938. Although several large monuments were initially planned for the county, including the Henry Smith project, the state constructed small grave markers and historical markers instead. Newspapers, the best

7 The Majority Report of the Advisory Board of Historians initially recommended: an $8,000 monument depicting the first Capitol, $10,000 for the Henry Smith monument, a $1,000 county monument, and eight historical markers. The Commission of Control only approved all their recommendations except for the county monument. During the process of carrying out recommendations, many Centennial projects were cancelled and money re-apportioned. This is explained in greater detail in Monuments and source for chronicling local Centennial history, gave little mention to historical markers and monuments after 1936, and none remarked on dedication ceremonies for any commemorative properties in Brazoria.\(^8\) It is also not clear when the Commission of Control officially decided to recognize Smith in statuary, versus bas-relief, form.

For a project that received little attention locally, the planning and construction for the Smith statue was a coordinated effort between private contractors and federal and state-level agencies, commissions, and boards. As a federally-funded commemorative project, the concept for a Henry Smith tribute underwent review by the U.S. Texas Centennial Commission in Washington. Upon their approval, the State Board of Control’s Centennial Division organized an art competition to commission sculptors for centenary public art projects. Artists submitted models for the Smith monument at a competition organized on April 2, 1936, but a controversy about their choice for the Pioneer Woman monument (Denton, Denton County) halted the state’s prescribed process for deciding artists for federally-funded Centennial commissions.\(^9\) When planning resumed a year later, it was under the auspices of the federally-appointed Arts Committee, which recommended artist Hugo Villa among dozens of other curated names. The Board of Control accepted Villa’s model for a statue to Henry Smith in June 1937.\(^10\)

The Centennial Division hired several contractors to complete the Smith statue with Villa. Dallas-architect Donald S. Nelson worked with the artist to plan and execute the large granite base (Figures 2-4). The Llano Premiere Granite Company quarried Texas pink granite for the project and installed the completed product.\(^11\) Villa sculpted the model in his San Antonio studio and contracted its bronze casting with the Brooklyn-based Mario Scoma Foundry.

On July 21, 1938, Freeport Facts published its only announcement regarding the Henry Smith statue. It stated, “the huge likeness of Smith,” was erected “facing the highway” on the local school grounds followed by a description of its physical attributes and Smith’s historical value to Texas. The article did not indicate local plans for its dedication. The following January, the Victoria Advocate stated that Brazorians were unsatisfied with the statue’s location. It quoted a disgruntled Refugio County Centennial committee member who mentioned Brazoria in an article about his community’s disdain for the Amon B. King’s Men Centennial monument, “the monstrosity,” in Refugio:

> We were rationed out what pleased the [Commission of Control] …The result is that many localities are ashamed or hurt by what they got, or where the monuments were placed…The people of Brazoria got a monument to Governor Henry Smith, but it was placed in an arbitrary spot and the people there have refused to dedicate it.\(^12\)

With no evidence to substantiate his claim or any records to refute it, it is unlikely the Henry Smith statue was dedicated. As the Brazoria community has grown, the statue that honors Henry Smith is no longer in an arbitrary

\(^8\) The Freeport Facts and Brazoria County Review were local newspapers consulted for this research. Other Brazoria County periodicals, like The Angleton Times, either did not cover the 1930s or did not have copies of that period available for research. Nearby counties also failed to document the Henry Smith statue or other Brazoria Centennial news.

\(^9\) The controversy over the “nude pioneer woman” delayed artist selections. The Board of Control commissioned artists for state-funded projects (like King’s Men) first, but other art projects (those funded jointly by the federal and state allocations) were deferred by a year due to a new process for artist selection that was implemented. Monuments and Buildings of the Texas Centennial MPDF, National Register nomination, 2018, 22-24.

location but within its central boundary. Each year, Henry Smith Day is celebrated on November 4 and, citizens pose with the statue.

Hugo Villa (1886-1948)

Hugo Villa was born on June 20, 1886 in Roppolo, Biella, Italy where he studied medicine, music, and sculpture. In 1918, Villa immigrated to the United States from Mexico, crossing the border in Laredo, Texas. He moved to New York City in 1919 where he became an assistant to Gutzon Borglum (1867-1941), an internationally-acclaimed sculptor best known for Mount Rushmore. While in New York, Villa married Ida de Mezzi (1889-1958) and fathered two children with her, Fiona and Anna Maria. Although the couple remained married, they spent most of their lives apart.

Villa worked alongside Borglum for more than a decade and followed Borglum around the country to assist with his many commissions. Borglum trusted Villa, his studio superintendent, to carve his maquettes into stone saying, “Villa is not equaled in the exact duplication of models.” Villa moved with Borglum to Texas in 1925 where Borglum established a studio in San Antonio to model the Texan Trail Drivers Monument. Borglum later closed this studio in the 1930s, but Villa permanently-settled in San Antonio. In 1927-28, Villa helped Borglum translate his models of presidents into the face Mt. Rushmore, but Borglum apparently fired Villa from the project for unexplained mistakes.

During the 1930s, Villa established a reputation as independent sculptor of portraits and ornamental architecture. During these productive years, he collaborated with architect S.C.P. (Samuel Charles Phelps) Vosper to create bronze relief and carved stone sculpture, and cast stone, plaster, and concrete ornaments. At Texas A&M University, Vosper hired Villa to work on ten buildings, and the intricate and playful cast stone ornaments were a substantial architectural feature on each edifice. Their partnership is also exemplified in Texas Memorial to Honored Dead (Austin, 1928), the reconstruction of Nuestra Senora del Espiritu Santo de Zuniga Mission (Goliad, 1935), and the Centennial-sponsored Goliad Memorial Auditorium (1936). A full record of his independent commissions is incomplete, and Villa is only credited with two, full-figure sculptural portraits: the German Pioneers Monument (New Braunfels, 1938) and the nominated statue of Henry Smith (1938).

The statewide Centennial public art program produced 20 statues across the state. Historian Light Cummins, Ph.D. observed that the statues “hark back to the artistic style of the Beaux Arts neo-classicism that centered in City Beautiful movement.” Indeed, commissioned artists like Villa, sculpted heroic portraits of historic Texans in a timeless style that was designed to appeal to the masses. Stylistically, the Henry Smith statue exhibits a classical aesthetic and presents the one-time governor in an admirable manner.

Following his Centennial commission in 1938, Villa gained full-time employment with the San Antonio-based Southwell Art Bronze and Rubber Stamp Company. As its resident artist, he modeled Texas-themed book-ends, plaques, statuettes, cigarette and powder boxes and completed bronze-encast bas-relief plaques for private and state-commissioned monuments.\textsuperscript{18} He established a close relationship with his boss, Wilson Southwell, over the next decade. When Villa suffered a fatal heart attack in 1948, Southwell and Vosper were pallbearers at his funeral.\textsuperscript{19}

Donald S. Nelson (1907-1992)

Dallas architect Donald S. Nelson’s contribution to the Henry Smith statue and the statewide Centennial public art project is often overshadowed by his later accomplishments. Nelson was born in Chicago, Illinois on February 10, 1907. His formal training began at age 19 at the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Fontainebleau, France. Upon his return stateside, he earned a BA in Architecture from Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT). After winning the prestigious Paris Prize, Nelson returned to France in 1927 to attend the Ecole Normal Superieur des Beaux Arts. The young architect began his professional career in 1930 working as a junior member of the Chicago firm Bennett, Parsons, and Frost.\textsuperscript{20}

Nelson’s work for the 1933 Chicago Century of Progress Exposition earned him the attention of Dallas architect George Dahl who invited Nelson, among others, in 1935 to assist in the design of the Texas Centennial Exposition complex. When the project concluded in 1936, Nelson remained in Dallas and established a private practice. He responded to the Texas State Board of Control’s open call for an architect to design bases for Centennial statues and monuments. Nelson won the contract and, between 1936 and 1939, he collaborated with commissioned sculptors, monument makers, stone quarries, and local communities to plan and execute the foundations for 24 public art projects.

Following World War II, Nelson entered the height of his professional career when he formed an architectural firm with Thomas D. Broad (Broad and Nelson) in Dallas. Nelson became a regionally-significant architect known for adding sculptural elements to his projects. No doubt his early career working with Centennial monuments introduced him to sculptors, like Raoul Josset, and influenced his architectural aesthetic. He designed many public and commercial buildings across the state and is recognized for several noteworthy buildings in Dallas and Waco. These projects include: the Dallas Mercantile Bank Complex (1940-1947), a contributing building in the Downtown Dallas Historic District; the Texas Memorial Grand Lodge Temple in Waco (1950); the original passenger terminal at Love Field in Dallas (1957); and the Scottish Rite Library and Museum in Waco (1969).\textsuperscript{21}

Conclusion

The 1938 Henry Smith statue in Brazoria, Brazoria County is one of 20 statues erected by the State of Texas celebrate the Centennial. Designed by Italian-born sculptor Hugo Villa and architect Donald S. Nelson, the statue memorializes Henry Smith, the first governor of Texas. It is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A in the area of Social History and Criterion C in the area of Art at the state level of significance under the multiple property submission Monuments and Buildings of the Texas Centennial. The Smith statue is an excellent example of the statewide public art program. It is significant in the area of Art as an important work by master sculptor Hugo Villa. The property also meets Criterion Consideration F (Commemorative Properties) because it is significant as a work of art that reflects early 20th century interest in recognizing historic subjects throughout Texas, which culminated in the publicly-funded statewide Texas Centennial. The period of significance is 1938, the year the statue was erected.
