Saving the Real Places of Texas

May is Preservation Month and the Texas Historical Commission is celebrating by offering five different regional workshops across the state. Join us in Lubbock to learn more about identifying the places that tell the stories of Texas.

Every community contains significant places that contribute to the historic fabric of Texas. A survey of cultural and historic resources is one of the best tools with which to initiate a preservation program to save these places. This workshop will address the nuts and bolts of survey work and how surveys can be used to leverage educational and economic opportunities for your city or county.

Speakers will share their experience with surveys during the morning portion of the workshop. The afternoon will be spent working in round robin discussion groups to apply the workshop information to each community represented.
