Welcome to Varner-Hogg Plantation State Historic Site, founded in 1824 by one of Texas' first settlers, Martin Varner and later owned by Texas Gov. James S. Hogg. Visitors can explore the real stories of the people who lived and worked on this property, from the prosperous landowners to the enslaved people and oil field workers whose labor was essential to the economic viability of the site.

HISTORY OF THE PLANTATION

In 1834, Varner sold the property to Columbus R. Patton of Kentucky. The extended Patton family moved to Brazoria County with 40–60 enslaved people, and with their labor, Columbus Patton built a successful sugarcane enterprise complete with a two-story mill. The enslaved people constructed the plantation house, smokehouse, sugar mill, and their own quarters with bricks made from Brazos River mud. The lives of some of the enslaved people on the plantation are well documented, partly in court records of Patton's contested will in which he made special provisions for four of the enslaved people: Rachael, Marie, Jacob Steel, and Solomon.

Patton and two of his brothers became active in politics prior to the Texas Revolution and served in the Texian army. Patton successfully managed the plantation until November 1854, when his family had him declared insane, possibly as a result of a brain tumor. He was placed in an asylum in South Carolina, where he died of typhoid fever in 1856. The Patton family sold the estate in 1869.

Between 1869 and 1901, the site changed ownership several times. At one point, owners used convicts, many of them former enslaved people, leased through state prisons. In 1875, however, state investigators found "particular cruelty," combined with the rising cost of convict labor, ended the use of prisoners, and the plantation turned to a sharecropping system.

In 1876, the Texas Land Company purchased the plantation and gradually shifted the site's focus to ranching. The majority of laborers living and working on the property were still African American. The plantation sustained major damage in several 1900s hurricanes. Many of the original buildings, including the sugar mill, were destroyed.

In 1901, former Texas Gov. James Stephen Hogg purchased the property, convinced that large amounts of oil lay beneath the surface. Large quantities of oil were never found during his lifetime. When Gov. Hogg died in 1906, his will recommended his children not sell the mineral rights for at least 15 years. Within that time period, the Hogg heirs struck oil and became very wealthy.

While none of the Hogg children lived in the plantation home, they each spent time at the site. Long weekends with visitors, dinner parties, and outings to the country brought them to the house. In 1919, the Hoggs made several modifications to the house, including the relocation of the main entrance, which resulted in its current appearance. Ima Hogg, the governor's only daughter and last surviving child, was a great collector and lover of decorative arts, and she furnished the home to reflect her father's love of history and her own admiration for George Washington and other early Americans. She donated the plantation to the State of Texas in 1958.
1 PLANTATION HOUSE
The plantation house, built for Columbus Patton in the 1830s, originally faced Varner Creek. A free-standing kitchen structure was located just to the northwest. The current appearance and orientation of the house is the result of remodeling done by the Hogg Family in the 1920s.

2 SUGAR MILL RUINS
The brick foundation and chimney are the only remains of the large two-story sugar mill that once was the heart of the plantation. The mill was built by the Pattons in the 1840s and was destroyed, like many of the buildings on site, by the 1900 hurricane. The raw sugarcane was cleaned and crushed on the second floor of the mill and then boiled and refined into usable sugar in the large metal kettles on the ground floor. Today, visitors can observe 19th-century kettles near the building ruins.

3 MISS IMA #4
Gov. Hogg originally purchased the property in 1901 for the oil he speculated the ground held. In 1918, 12 years after his death, profitable wells and oil derricks were finally established and covered the area. The Hogg children’s fortune came from this oil.

4 SLAVE QUARTERS
The slave quarters were constructed around the same time as the main plantation house out of slave-made bricks and local materials. After slavery was abolished these small cabins were used to house convict laborers and later by sharecroppers working the land. Like so many other site buildings they were destroyed in the 1900 hurricane. Only the brick foundations of the buildings remain.

5 RANGER COTTAGE
This small house was built in the 1920s during the site’s oil boom and used by oil field workers. Visitors may rent this cottage that sleeps eight. Please inquire at the visitor center.

6 MISS IMA’S COTTAGE
Built in the 1920s, this small house was both home and office for the oil field manager that oversaw the fields and employees. Inside this house, visitors may explore exhibits about the site’s history.

7 HAL’S HOUSE
This tin-roofed building was the last residence constructed on the plantation in 1921. For many years it was home to Mary and Hal Fields. Hal worked as the ranch foreman and property manager for the Hogg family until his death in 1969.

8 PATTON CEMETERY
This is the final resting place of at least four members of the Patton family. The 1900 hurricane destroyed most of the cemetery’s decorative brick work. None of the original headstones remain, but an obelisk commemorates those buried. A separate slave cemetery is also said to have existed elsewhere on site, but no trace of it has been located.

9 SWIMMING HOLE
Gov. Hogg constructed this pool to give his children a place to swim other than Varner Creek, which is home to several species of snakes and alligators.

10 GOVERNOR HOGG’S BATH
When Gov. Hogg purchased the site, there was no indoor plumbing in the house. The governor, who was 6’3” and weighed more than 300 pounds, did not comfortably fit in the galvanized metal bathtubs of the time, so he had this outdoor tub constructed.

11 BARN
The Pattons built this barn in the 1840s, and it was later moved to its current location. Today it is used to display farming equipment, wagons, carriages, and items used in sugarcane processing.

12 BUNKHOUSE
Built in the 1920s, this building was used for the oil field business and workers’ sleeping quarters and is now the visitor center and gift shop for the site.

13 PECAN ORCHARD
Pecans were a favorite of Gov. Hogg, and the orchard has been maintained since his time. In the fall, visitors are allowed to pick up fallen nuts with the permission of site staff.

14 COLLECTIONS RESOURCE CENTER
The Collections Resource Center is home to Miss Ima Hogg’s historic decorative arts collection, as well as a conservation lab and the plantation’s archives. For an additional fee, guided tours are available upon request.

15 RANGER COTTAGE
This small house was built in the 1920s during the site’s oil boom and used by oil field workers. Visitors may rent this cottage that sleeps eight. Please inquire at the visitor center.

16 MISS IMA’S COTTAGE
Built in the 1920s, this small house was both home and office for the oil field manager that oversaw the fields and employees. Inside this house, visitors may explore exhibits about the site’s history.

17 HAL’S HOUSE
This tin-roofed building was the last residence constructed on the plantation in 1921. For many years it was home to Mary and Hal Fields. Hal worked as the ranch foreman and property manager for the Hogg family until his death in 1969.

18 PATTON CEMETERY
This is the final resting place of at least four members of the Patton family. The 1900 hurricane destroyed most of the cemetery’s decorative brick work. None of the original headstones remain, but an obelisk commemorates those buried. A separate slave cemetery is also said to have existed elsewhere on site, but no trace of it has been located.
